How do I access BIOINFORMATICS Online?

1. From 1998, you can access BIOINFORMATICS Online for FREE if your organisation's library has a current paid subscription to the print version of BIOINFORMATICS and has completed a simple registration procedure. Simply go to http://www.oup.co.uk/bioinformatics/ and follow the links........

2. Alternatively you can take advantage of our special offer for personal subscribers. For further details simply go to http://www.oup.co.uk/bioinformatics/ and click on "Subscription Information"

What if neither I nor my library have a current subscription?

You can still visit the BIOINFORMATICS Online site and browse or search the contents and abstracts as a visitor. But you won’t be able to access the full text of articles.

I’m thinking of subscribing, can I see a sample online issue first?

Certainly! You’ll find when you come to our site as a visitor that you can access the full text of a sample issue.

BIOINFORMATICS

Online http://www.oup.co.uk/bioinformatics/

From January 1998, Computer Applications in the Biosciences (CABIOS) is changing its name to BIOINFORMATICS. The name change highlights the importance of bioinformatics, a subject which is emerging as one of the leading scientific disciplines for the next century.

The principal aim of the editors, Gary Stormo and Chris Sander, is to publish innovative, exciting, science that reports on the important advancements in bioinformatics.

BIOINFORMATICS now augments its printed issues with a full-text web-based online edition, BIOINFORMATICS Online. Look at these advantages:-

➤ You can read articles online, in advance of their appearance in print.

➤ You can access a fully searchable back file of papers – back to January 1997.

➤ You can go, via hot links, from the references in each article to their Medline Abstracts.

➤ You can go from articles to genetic sequencing and other biological databases via the NCBI subset of Medline (Entrez).

➤ You can register to receive, by e-mail, advance notice of papers to be published.

Access BIOINFORMATICS Online for free if your organisation’s library has a current paid subscription to the print version of BIOINFORMATICS and has completed a simple registration procedure.
