A mediastinal mass, discovered in a 69-year-old woman complaining of fever (Fig. 1), was diagnosed as paraganglioma at mediastinoscopy. At surgery, the mass was completely extramural, except for its pedicle arising from the left atrium, which was stapled (Fig. 2). The final diagnosis was extramural cardiac paraganglioma.