Erratum

Variation in IGHMBP2 is not associated with IgA nephropathy in independent studies of UK Caucasian and Chinese Han patients

Tanqi Lou1,, Jun Zhang1,, Daniel P. Gale2,*, Andrew J. Rees3, Ben Rhodes4, John Fehally5, Caixia Li6, Youji Li7, Ru Li8, Weijun Huang8, Bin Hu9, Joseph C.K. Leung9, Man F. Lam9, Kar N. Lai9, Yiming Wang8 and Patrick H. Maxwell2

1Department of Nephrology, 3rd Affiliated Hospital, Center for Genome Research, Zhongshan School of Medicine, Sun Yat-Sen University, Guangzhou, China, 2Division of Medicine, University College London, London, UK, 3Institute of Clinical Pathology, Medical University of Vienna, Vienna, Austria, 4Section of Molecular Genetics and Rheumatology, Division of Medicine, Imperial College London, London, UK, 5John Walls Renal Unit, University Hospitals of Leicester NHS Trust, Leicester, UK, 6Department of Medical Statistics, School of Public Health, Center for Genome Research, Zhongshan School of Medicine, Sun Yat-Sen University, Guangzhou, China, 7Department of Nephrology, 1st Affiliated Hospital, Center for Genome Research, Zhongshan School of Medicine, Sun Yat-Sen University, Guangzhou, China, 8Department of Medical Genetics, Center for Genome Research, Zhongshan School of Medicine, all at Sun Yat-Sen University, Guangzhou, China and 9Department of Medicine, Queen Mary Hospital, University of Hong Kong, Pokfulam, Hong Kong

Correspondence and offprint requests to: Patrick H. Maxwell; Email: p.maxwell@ucl.ac.uk, or Yiming Wang; Email: ywzhong@hotmail.com
*T. L., J. Z. and D. P. G. contributed equally to this work.

Nephrol Dial Transplant 2010; doi:10.1093/ndt/gfp661

The corresponding author information has been updated and is newly displayed above.
The authors would like to bring your attention to this change.